The NCTE regulations state a college must have at least eight teachers for 50 students and a minimum of 15 teachers for a batch of 100 stu-

Soma Bandyopadhyay, vice-chancellor of the university, said they are reminding cil for Teachers' Education the colleges to fill the vacancies in teaching posts before (NCTE), before the start of the renewing their affiliation.

About 600 private BEd colleges are affiliated to the university.

Last year, the university had barred 253 BEd colleges from admitting students and cancelled their affiliation because they failed to abide by the NCTE regulations.

"One of the reasons why admitting students was that that they did not have adethey did not have enough teachers," said an official at the university.

The July 19 notice, signed by the acting registrar, says: "It has also been observed that a sizeable number of colleges are yet to update their ERC (Eastern Regional Council of NCTE) faculty list as was notified earlier."

In the updated faculty list, the colleges must mention the teachers' names and provide their photographs and academic qualifications.

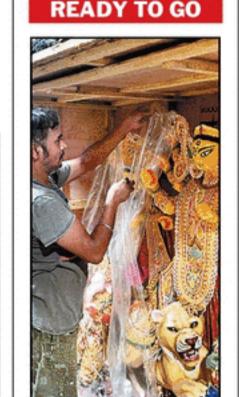

"We are asking the colleges to fill all the posts because we cannot afford to compromise with the quality of education. Last year, we had to act strictly and cancel the affiliation of many colleges after it emerged

A university official said they had earlier asked the colleges to recruit an adequate number of teachers. "As many of the colleges have yet to comply, the university was forced to issue the notice last week," he said.

The two-year BEd programme has become crucial because the state school service commission (SSC) has mandated that candidates applying for teaching jobs in government-aided secondary and higher secondary schools must have a BEd degree to be eligible to write the selection
